Why Native Plants?

Native plants have grown and evolved in our area for hundreds, sometimes thousands, of years. They've adapted to our climate and soils together with the animals and insects that rely on them for food and shelter.

Native plants are the better choice for your yard, garden and community. Planting native trees, shrubs, wildflowers and grasses creates resilient, sustainable landscapes. They help restore biodiversity, build climate resilience and support local wildlife. When you choose the right plants for the right place, they require less water once established than conventional lawn or annual flower beds. Plant natives to save time, money and energy, while adding colour and beauty to your yard.

Buying Native Plants

First, choose the right native plants for your property using Credit Valley Conservation's (CVC) plant lists at cvc.ca/landscaping.

Find the native plant nursery that meets your needs. Check their hours of operation. Some businesses operate seasonally, by appointment or mail order only. Always check plant availability before visiting.

Never remove plants from natural areas. Most wild plants do not survive replanting and removing plants can harm pollinators and other wildlife that depend on them for survival.

Programs to help you get started

We have programs and resources to help you grow native plants on your property.

Your Green Yard offers workshops and presentations on sustainable landscaping to local residents within the Credit River Watershed. cvc.ca/ygy

Greening Corporate Grounds offers advice and events to businesses and institutions within the Credit River Watershed. cvc.ca/gcg

Countryside Stewardship offers workshops and technical and financial assistance to support rural environmental stewardship. cvc.ca/countrysidestewardship
